

John B. Sayward, Editor

The Portland Advertiser, seemingly the desirer to keep up a discussion of the fact that it has not been selected as a medium for publishing the U S Laws now calls upon us to state why we took exception to its return to the selection of the Whig as the paper in Maine in which the Laws should be published. Certainly it was we who stated our remarks at the time because the Advertiser did not state that this was a Whig paper, seemed to us disposed to give an impression that it was not such. We don't ask and deride of the Portland Advertiser, but endorsement is too good to allow it the implication to deny as the character of being wing paper and this understanding to state in the form and spirit of its reference to The Advertiser makes strength of all this call upon us to publish what it has said, the subject and berate us for not complying with a previous request to the same effect reference to the first request we may be led to say that several days confinement at work with sickness prevented attention to the request until like many other matters it passed our mind. With regard to the present request may say that probably the Advertiser goes will be equally and better served not complying with the request. That quite unlike the Jennings Journal and other papers, regards this matter as the best means of making capital to back hence the more agitation it can keep better; it will serve—Lucas. The Advertiser an old friend of ours, that is as friends its wont with any wing paper in the land, we ought, perhaps, to be willing to let it go through, when it is so much the cloud as to pour out its delusions of complaints against those of its own party. ever, as the Advertiser is a stickler for we intend to comply with its request in publishing its remarks, relative to the Whig which discredited from the other papers.

been prepared for the purpose of convincing both students and practical builders of the way to the one clear idea of the power and mode of application of steam power to the other much useful matter connected with his profession.

Grafting.

This season for grafting trees has come, and those who wish to change any of their trees into bearing trees that will produce a valuable, should be up and doing.

If your grafts are not set, they should be made immediately, because they will not keep out after the buds have started.

We generally give every spring the name of making grafting wax or composition. The ingredients generally used are tallow, bees wax and rosin. The following are used vis a vis.

One part of good beef tallow; two parts of bees wax; and two parts rosin. These should be melted together, and when thoroughly heated added to the following: pour it into water, and incorporate together.
